DINNER FOR DAD

"Dear Dad works so hard!" thought Augie to himself one day. "I really should do something to be helpful. I know! I'll have his dinner ready when he gets home from work!"

So he set about preparing dinner, and though Augie Doggie usually had a hard time boiling water, he was optimistic about fixing a full-course meal.

"What would my precious pop like?" he thought. "A tossed salad to begin with, and a steak with baked potato and two or three vegetables! And for dessert, apple pie!"

Once Augie had decided on the menu, he got out a cookbook and began working. It all seemed easy enough to him as he read and followed the directions. He mixed the pie dough and cut up some apples. He stuck the pie in the oven, along with the steak and a potato. He put the vegetables on to boil and cut up greens for a salad.

Things went along fine until Augie decided to toss the salad. He tossed it too hard and it spilled all over the kitchen. While he was cutting up a new batch of salad, the phone rang. It was his friend, Spicer Spaniel, and he wanted Augie to help him with his homework.

Augie was not one to desert a friend in need, so he promised Spicer Spaniel that he would be right over. Before he left, he had to make sure everything was going right with the dinner. He turned off the stove and then headed for his friend's house.

But — Augie only thought he had turned the stove off. It kept right on going, cooking the dinner, broiling the steak, baking the potato, and cooking the vegetables, and boiling the salad. Boiling the salad? Yes, in his hurry, Augie had put the new salad on the stove instead of in the refrigerator.

All this could have led to disaster, were it not for the fact that Doggie Daddy came home early from work.

"Augie, my son, something's burning!" he shouted. Upon receiving no answer, he went into the kitchen where his dinner was being reduced to ashes.

"Oh, my goodness!" he gasped, turning off the stove. "Augie must have been cooking something for himself. But where is he?"

Then Doggie Daddy saw the menu that Augie had written. "Dear Dad's Dinner!" it read.

"My poor little thoughtful son's going to be heartbroken if this dinner doesn't turn out good!" thought Dad. "However, I think I can make him happy, even if I have to pull a little trick!"

So, he made a phone call to a restaurant and in no time they delivered the exact same dinner that Augie had tried to fix.

That evening, Augie didn't know the difference. He was happy in the thought that he had done something for his dad.

"Dear Son of Mine," said Doggie Daddy, smacking his chops, "this is one of the best dinners I have had in my whole life!" Then, he added under his breath, "Thanks to you for forgetting to turn off the stove before you went out!"

"I'm glad you like it!" replied Augie, eagerly. "because I'm going to fix dinner for you every night this week!"

Poor pop suppressed a groan and said, "But, son of mine, I'm going on a diet of raw vegetables and ice cream for a month."

Augie just smiled and replied, "Great, my dieting dad, then I'll fix your COLD DIET for the next thirty days... and it won't be half as much work!"

Doggie Daddy didn't answer!
